1. Introduction

Continuing education (CE) as important part of the third mission was in focus as one of the main objectives of IF4TM project. National partners on IF4TM have different organizational models, in order to tackle this issue joint approach to CE was developed in the beginning of the project activities. Main outcome of this initial endeavor was development of the integrative approach for CE. This approach put special focus on the quality and sustainability requirements for every aspect of the third mission of universities.

This integrative approach is baseline document for this report. Results and findings of the whole set of activities on CE on partner institutions will be summarized and assessed.

This report provides overview of the realized activities on each national partner institutions in line with integrative approach. Document provides results of monitoring and analysis of implementation and progress of CE activities within IF4TM project.

Report is organized in following order.

After introducing chapter overview of activities on development of legal framework for integrative approach in continuing education is provided for every partner. Third chapter provides information on establishing of specialized university units responsible for and/or included in CE processes. Forth chapter provide overview of implementation of quality assurance and assessment procedures on the partner institutions. Fifth chapter provides information of incentives for participants in the development and realization of continuing education. Sixth chapter cover issues of promotion of continuing education at university level and to wider community.

Based on these, seventh chapter provides a set of conclusions and recommendations will be given in order to make this process sustainable after the project's end.

Final chapter give detailed overview of the all CE activities delivered during project implementation.

2. Activities on development of legal framework for integrative approach in continuing education

Integrative approach encompasses accomplishment of the Continuing Education (CE) objectives and include already existing but fragmented activities. Integrative approach includes courses already realized at universities and member faculties that do not belong to the system of formal education. Simultaneously defines procedures for course approval at university level, their evaluation, registration and publishing, monitoring of participants progress, issuing certificates and reporting. This includes normative regulations and clearly defined procedures that CE organizers need to apply. Besides, it regulates process for the approval of new courses as well as to establish the efficient quality assurance through clearly defined procedures and monitoring of key progress indicators.

One of the important aspects developed during project is development of bylaws which will govern CE activities on university and/or clear inclusion of the CE in the existing regulatory documents on the HEI. During implementation of the project recommendation for development of the bylaws and appropriate documentation is delivered as internal part of the integrative approach to CE.

*Note: Some of the listed parameters have existed previously in regulatory acts of UBG, while IF4TM contributed to their update and improvement.

3. Activities on organisation and establishing University units included in CE

Integrative approach of CE education developed during implementation of IF4TM project envisaged existence of the unified unit established on the University level for coordination of overall CE activities.

University CE unit, by integrative approach is responsible for approval, organization, development and promotion of system of continuing education and provides the support to all parties interested in further education and professional improvement.

7. Follow up recommendations

Within the framework of a comprehensive analysis and mapping of CE activities to seven HEIs in Serbia, which are project partners at the beginning of the project, SWOT analyses and initial recommendations, partners of the IF4TM project have developed the D4.1 Guidelines for establishing the integrative approach in continuing education at the university level.

The D4.1 gives the basic principles of the legal regulations of the integrative approach to continuing education, with guidelines for the development of the Bylaw on Continuing Education, as well as the guidelines for the development of the Bylaw annexes.

Based on the answers given in the tables shown in chapters 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 of this report, all Serbian universities that are project partners have adopted a strategy/bylaw that regulates continuing education activities. Four out of seven HEIs have defined procedures and questionnaires for mapping the CE activities and supply, while only one university has and applies annexes to the CE bylaw defining procedures for the approval and implementation of the CE program. Procedures and annexes to the CE bylaw relating to the reporting and monitoring of implemented CE programs and the issue of certificates are defined on three surveyed universities.

Recommendation 1: To Develop and implement bylaw and accompanying annexes that regulate the field of continuous education in all phases, starting from mapping needs and supply, applying and approving CE programs at an integrated university level, through a quality implementation of the CE program, up to the issuance of certificates, recognition of points and ECTS credits, as well as reporting on implemented CE programs.

Use the Guidelines D4.1 as follows:

- Chapter 3 - Development of legal framework for integrative approach in continuing education at university level
- Section 7.3 Procedures for development and approval of continuing education programs
- Section 7.4 Procedures for quality assurance and assessment in realization of continuing education programs
- Section 7.5 Procedures for issuing certificates in continuing education programs
- Section 7.6 Monitoring of the integrative approach in the realization of continuing education and key performance indicators and D4.1 annexes:

- Annex 1.1 Questionnaires for the management of higher education institution (Questionnaires#1)
- Annex 1.2 Questionnaire for professors, associates and researchers (Questionnaire#2)
- Annex 2.1 Request for approval of the Continuing education program by the university's Committee
- Annex 2.2 Elaborate on the introduction of new continuing education program
- Annex 2.3 Curriculum
- Annex 2.4 Table of lecturers
- Annex 2.5 Description of space, equipment and other teaching material to be used in the realization of CE program

- Annex 3.1 Attendance logs
- Annex 3.2 Questionnaire of satisfaction
- Annex 3.3 Register of the results of knowledge examinations and achieved learning outcomes
- Annex 4.1 Report on realized program of continuing education
- Annex 4.2 Request for issuing certificates
- Annex 4.3 Certificate model
- Annex 4.4 Annual report on realization of approved CE programs

All partner universities in Serbia, participating in the IF4TM project have established organizational units dealing with coordination and support CE activities, with clearly defined objectives, activities and scope of work. However, only three universities reported having established coordination of CE activities with faculties / departments and other organizational units.

Recommendation 2: In order to establish an integrative approach and better coordination, promotion, monitoring and reporting of CE activities, it is necessary for university CE organizational units to establish better and sustainable cooperation with a similar units established at the of faculties/departments, to develop an integrated information system and regular updating of data on implemented CE programs.

In the area of quality assurance and assesment, all the universities that have been interviewed have a Quality Assurance Strategy and a Commission for Quality Control and Assurance, which, among other things, are responsible for approving and assessing the quality of CE programs that are being implemented in an integrative approach at university level. It has been shown that integrated universities have clearly defined procedures for applying, developing and approving the CE program, and partly for monitoring them.

Recommendation 3: To establish clearly defined procedures for the application and development of the CE program by faculty/departmental employees, procedures for approval, quality control and quality assurance proposed and implemented by the Commission for Quality Control and Quality Assurance, at the proposal of a special Working Group of the Commission. Familiarize employees at the university/faculties/departments of the approved procedures and their mandatory application. Define key performance indicators for monitoring implementation and progress in the field of CE, especially in terms of quality, with the aim of results-oriented monitoring and reporting.

Almost all the universities in Serbia, the partners in the IF4TM project have defined incentives for CE organizational units, both at the university level and at the faculty level (if any), as well as the incentives for developing cooperation with partner institutions for the development and implementation of the CE program. However, only two universities (integrated) have defined incentives for employed professors and associates to be more engaged in CE activities.

Recommendation 4: To establish a system of incentives for a wider and better development and implementation of CE activities by professors and associates at universities, including material and non-material incentives.

Use the Guidelines D4.1, as follows:

- Chapter 8. Incentives for participants in the development and realization of continuing education
- Section 8.1 Incentives for professors and associates

Title of CE programme (UNS-2)	Stress and mental disorders
Implementing Faculty/ Department/University unit	Faculty of Medicine (Center for continual education in medicine)
Short description	In a multicentric WHO study, 60-80% of accidents at work were caused by stress. It is also considered that stress-related disorders or so-called lifestyle diseases are the cause of death in 70-80% of cases in the developed world. The strong correlation between psychological distress and the occurrence of somatic symptoms has been confirmed in different cultures irrespective of the level of economic development. In addition, stress, acute and chronic undoubtedly represents an important factor in the emergence and manifestation of a range of mental disorders. Timely recognition of predisposed people can "reduce" the number of future chronic diseases and mental disorders, with the appropriate change of the harmful habits of these people and the training to be easier to bear and easier to overcome stressful situations. Consequently, the rate of illness from a range of mental and physical illnesses, as well as the mortality they carry, would be significantly reduced. The quality of life, working, social and family functioning of such persons would be significantly improved.
